The Financial Operations of the Lincoln

Government. The Northern journalists have indulged in a great deal of exultation at the unexpected success of their Government Loans, which were arranged through the instrumentality of the banks in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, The ability of the banks to advance a hundred millions of the funds upon the Government treasury notes, bearing seven and three-tenths per cent. interest was only an evidence, says the Richmond Examiner, that the usual oubject of bank discounts, to wit, mercantile paper, was not to be procured in quantities commensurated with the capital of the banks. That capital existed before the war in a magnitude adapted to the commercial wants of an enterprising and prosperous population, numbering twenty millions, carrying on a business which, in the city of New alone, was represented in the Clearing-House at from aix hundred to eight hundred millions of dol-

The breaking out of war and cessation of all dealings with the South, of course put a stop to large classes of commercial enterprise, and left the capital of banking institutions, usually employed in those branches of business, unoccupied. It was, therefore, not a remarkable thing to find the banks willing to invest their idle capital in Government

They first took fifty millions of treasury notes, securing the privilege of being the sole recipients of those issues of the Government, and of taking two other instalments of fifty millions each at their option. Gen. Scott in New York. The New York Times, of the 9th inst., contains a long account of the complimentary visit from a ommittee appointed by the Chamber of Commerce and from the Union Defence Committee, from which

Upon being intoduced to his parlor, Mr. Perit, REMARKS OF MR. PERFE.

Not only must the commercial community of the North experience a mightier disaster than that of Bull Bun, but the Government itself will feel again another cartbonake under its feet.

Even England could not purchase our cotton, expenses to you, personally, the respect which we sutartain for you, and the gratinude which we feel, in common with all our followestimates to great the common with all our followestimates and the common with all our followestimates to great the common with all our followestimates of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, to present the Chamber of Commerce of New York, to pres cept upon the condition of paying for it in mer-chandise; for even her finances would be overtaxed may live to see the Union established throughout if required to furnish two hundred millions of all the States, and that, in the evening of your days specie for a single crop of a single country. It is you may witness, in this nation, a degree of pros to be seen whether the North can stand paying for parity and glory which has never before been at-

Xon, of Gol. Brown's Regiment Tennessee Volum The measure is full and overflowing. This great calamity which has come upon our country—this great rebellion—found me far advanced in life, and by the labor and anxieties which it threw upon me has broken me down. I stand before you quite a wreck. Had this calamity occurred some three or four years earlier, it would have found me yet in a state of vigor, is a condition to render some ser-vice to my country, to meet that rebellion; and I think and flatter myself that I should have met it with considerable success.

Although it has thrown me hors du combet myself, I have the happiness of saying to you and my opinion may be of some little value upon that subject that I have left in the field a large, noble, and patri otic army, for it is filled with many of our best citizens, officers, and men, commanded by Generals of very great merit-Generals capable of commanding and eachaining victory to their cars.

I have left in the field young and vigorous men competent to do all the duties which their country can require of them-a Major General McClellan full of science and genius, and already of respecta-ble experience. I have left Major General Halleck, another officer of genius and science, and judgment and discretion, who cannot fall to meet all the wishes of his Government and his country. Besides those Major Generals we have many Brigadiers and Blose Major Generals we have many Brigadiers and Colonels of high worth. I do not, therefore, despair of the cause of the Union. Nay, I am confident of the triumph of that within some reasonable time. I should hope by the following spring that the rebellion would be suppressed; I should hope in a short time more that our Union might be restablished in fraternity and made beautiful, and I trust was a suppressed; I should hope in a short time more that our Union might be retrust made so firm as to endure forever. Union has commanded all my affections; the Union is my country; I have known no country but the Union; I owe my allegiance to nothing but the United States of America, and I mean to die in that

I am about to leave this city and my country for a short time, in search of some reparation for my physical condition. I have had a very bad turn the morning—a giddiness in the head, verging up-on vertigo. I hope, before I get across the ocean, to get rid of that infirmity of the head, and I do not doubt that I shall find a certain individual of some brought the intelligence, and it has come to us in —with many thanks for the honor you have done so many ahapes and from so many quarters, in—me on this occasion—I must take my leave of you.
